

Facing Mental Health: Listen to your body

▶ 17 August 2021 (Tuesday)
10.00am - 12.00pm

Programme Overview

Depression is a common mental disorder. According to the 2019 National Health and Morbidity Survey, 1/2 a million adult Malaysians have depression every year. Untreated depression can cause the affected person to suffer greatly and function poorly at work, at school and in the family. At its worst, depression can lead to suicide. Apart from depression, anxiety disorders also have significant impact on individuals at the workplace. In Malaysia, anxiety disorders affect approximately 6 in 100 people. Burn-out is not a medical illness but results from long-term workplace stress. It is characterised by tiredness, negativism and reduced professional efficacy. While not a medical illness, the next common condition is burnout, which often results from long-term workplace stress. Burnouts at the workplace have long been ignored and need to be addressed.

According to the National Health and Morbidity Survey 2019, 1 in 5 of the population rated their health condition as "not good". The first Director-General of the World Health Organisation (WHO) Dr Brock Chisholm mentioned that "without mental health there can be no true physical health". Stress affects all parts of the body including the musculoskeletal, respiratory, cardiovascular, endocrine, gastrointestinal, nervous, and reproductive systems. Improving our health starts from the preventive phase of mental health care. This workshop will discuss risk factors as well as tips to improve the subclinical mental health condition.
