Programme Overview

Corruption impedes economic growth, contributes to social inequality, and obstructs innovation. As such, global leaders of business, government and civil society are demanding better ways to foster trust and improve integrity and transparency.

Technology has emerged as the greatest ally of transparency and a critical tool against corruption. However, the rate of change and complexity of solutions accompanying the 4th Industrial Revolution make it difficult for any organisation to keep up with emerging technologies. The private sector seems to view new tech innovations with more optimism as potential enablers of trust and integrity.

Blockchain has drastically changed the landscape of technology as we know it. Dubbed a disruptive technology it has contributed to improvements in factors such as greater transparency, increased efficiency, increased security, and improved traceability in various fields especially in accounting, auditing, finance, supply chain, enterprises, and medicine industry due to its decentralised nature.

More organisations are employing individuals with Blockchain training and certifications that related to the issues of integrity and transparency to keep abreast with the latest trends.
